== Origins == History == In Alba, Italy, in 1968, Michele Ferrero, proposed to market a product that was palatable to children (with chocolate) and at the same time reassuring to mothers (with milk), thus the slogan "+ milk (latte) - cocoa (cacao)" shown on the package. Kinder Chocolate, a milk chocolate with a milky filling, was introduced to the German and Italian markets in the same year. The word "Kinder", used as a universal brand, is German for "children". The product gained commercial success, and was later sold in other European countries. The face of a child is depicted (first by Günter Euringer, then by Matteo Farneti) on the right side of

The dish's origins are unclear. A legend recounts that during the Middle Ages, monks in a monastery in the mountains of Tramonti, Campania, produced a syrupy black liqueur known as Concerto d'Erbe. At some point, the prior created a new dish as he began dipping fried eggplant in the liqueur. Later in nearby Maiori, townspeople adapted this dish, substituting the liqueur with melted chocolate, creating melanzane al cioccolato. a146405e82 Alessandro Preziosi: Andrea a146405e82
