Introduction to Modern English Word-Formation explains that “In words such as motel. – which In linguistics, a blend—also known as a blend word, lexical blend, or portmanteau—is a word formed by combining the meanings, and parts of the sounds, of two or more words together

A blend is similar to a contraction. On one hand, mainstream blends tend to be formed at a particular historical moment followed by a rapid rise in popularity. On the other hand, contractions are formed by the gradual drifting together of words over time due to the words commonly appearing together in sequence, such as do not naturally becoming don't (phonologically, becoming). A blend also differs from a compound, which fully preserves the stems of the original words. The British lecturer Valerie Adams... Stemming is rejected. The stem need not be identical to the morphological root of the word; it is usually sufficient that related words map to the same stem, even if this stem is not in itself a valid root. Algorithms for stemming have been studied in computer science since the 1960s. One improvement upon basic suffix stripping is the use of suffix substitution. Many search engines treat words with the same stem as synonyms as a kind of query expansion, a process called conflation. Similar to a stripping rule, a substitution rule replaces In linguistic morphology and information retrieval, stemming is the process of reducing inflected (or sometimes derived) words to their word stem, base or root form—generally a written word form
