Sentence completion tests Notwithstanding, there is debate over whether or not sentence completion tests elicit responses from conscious thought rather than unconscious states. Therefore, sentence completion technique, with such advantage, promotes the respondents to disclose their concealed feelings. Sentence completion tests typically provide respondents with beginnings of sentences, referred to as "stems", and respondents then complete the sentences in ways that are meaningful to them. The responses are believed to provide indications of attitudes, beliefs, motivations, or other mental states. This debate would affect whether sentence completion tests can be strictly categorized as projective tests. many sentence completion tests available for use by researchers. Some of the most widely used sentence completion tests include: Rotter
