Post-mortem photography Post-mortem photography is the practice of photographing the recently deceased. The form continued the tradition of earlier painted mourning portraits. Various cultures use and have used this practice, though the best-studied area of post-mortem photography is that of Europe and America. Today post-mortem photography is primarily used in the contexts of police and pathology work. There can be considerable dispute as to whether individual early photographs actually show a dead person or not, often sharpened by commercial considerations. Various cultures use and have used this practice, though the best-studied Post-mortem photography is the practice of photographing the recently deceased c794bc4e56

33 (Battlestar Galactica) an additional scene—President Roslin (Mary McDonnell) learning of the newborn—upon which to end the episode with a hopeful note. "33" first aired in "33" is the first episode of the first season and the pilot episode of the reimagined military science fiction television show Battlestar Galactica, immediately following the events of the 2003 miniseries. Peter (enslaved man) 1863) (also known as Gordon, or "Whipped Peter", or "Poor Peter") was an escaped American slave who was the subject of photographs documenting the extensive keloid scarring of his back from whippings received in slavery. as two of the earliest and most dramatic examples of how the newborn medium of photography could change the course of history. The "scourged back" photo became one of the most widely circulated photos of the abolitionist movement during the American Civil War and remains one of the most notable photos of the 19th-century United States. " Many historians have repeated Peter (fl c794bc4e56

The topic has evolved as technologies have developed. Technology poses an ethical dilemma on producers and consumers alike. The episode was written by series creator Ronald D. Moore, and the television directoral debut of Michael Rymer. Moore and executive producer David Eick made the decision to slot this episode as the first of the season because of its potential impact on the audience. "33" distinguished the themes of the new Battlestar Galactica series by...

Hunky Dory The album's cover artwork, photographed in monochrome and subsequently recoloured, features Bowie in a pose inspired by Hunky Dory is the fourth studio album by the English musician David Bowie, released in the United Kingdom on 17 December 1971 through RCA Records. Rick Wakeman contributed piano shortly before joining Yes. to Bowie's newborn son Duncan. Bowie co-produced the album with Ken Scott, who had engineered Bowie's previous two records. Bowie assembled Mick Ronson (guitar), Trevor Bolder (bass) and Mick Woodmansey (drums), and recorded the album in mid-1971 at Trident Studios in London. Following a break from touring and recording, Bowie settled down to write new songs, composing on piano rather than guitar as in earlier works

Compared to the guitar-driven hard rock sound of The Man Who Sold the World, Bowie opted for a warmer, more melodic piano-based pop rock and art pop style on Hunky Dory. His lyrical concerns on the record...

Ethics of technology technology raises the issue of whether individuals other than newborn will benefit from newborn screening practices. Technology ethics is the application of ethical thinking to growing concerns as new technologies continue to rise in prominence. A reconceptualization of the purpose The ethics of technology is a sub-field of ethics addressing ethical questions specific to the technology age, the transitional shift in society wherein personal computers and subsequent devices provide for the quick and easy transfer of information

The photo of the scourged back "spurred a number of different narratives, all of which were intended to illustrate the meaning of his portrait, and privilege his photograph as a means by which to picture slavery and dramatize the need for abolition". In 2013, Joan Paulson Gage wrote in The New York Times that "The images of Wilson Chinn in chains, like the...
