Black people However, not all people considered "black" have dark skin and often additional phenotypical characteristics are relevant, such as certain facial and hair-texture features. It is most commonly used for people of sub-Saharan African ancestry, Indigenous Australians, and Melanesians, though it has been applied in many contexts to other groups, and is no indicator of any close ancestral relationship whatsoever. Often in countries with socially based systems of racial classification in the Western world, the term "black" is used to describe persons who are perceived as darker-skinned in contrast to other populations. Indigenous African societies. ANC government has introduced laws in support of affirmative action policies for Blacks; under these they define "Black" people to include "Africans" Black is a racial classification of people, usually a political and skin color-based category for specific populations with a mid- to dark brown complexion

Law of the United States The United States Code is the official compilation and codification of general and permanent federal statutory law. A collection of glosses is a glossary. A collection of medieval legal glosses, made by glossators, is called an apparatus. The compilation of glosses into glossaries was the beginning of lexicography, and the glossaries so compiled were in fact the first dictionaries. In modern times a glossary, as opposed to a dictionary, is typically found in a text as an appendix of specialized terms that the typical reader may find unfamiliar. Also, satirical explanations of words and events are called glosses. The German Romantic movement used the expression of gloss for poems commenting on a given other...
