Purge server cache 76d9a3b9ff Domain Name System (DNS) resolution is the process of translating a human-readable domain name (for example, en.wikipedia.org) into an IP address that computers can use. Every ISP runs a DNS server to allow their customers to translate domain names into IP addresses that computers understand and use. When an ISP's DNS server receives a request to translate a name, according to RFC the DNS server should return the associated IP address to the customer's computer which is then able to connect to the requested resource. 76d9a3b9ff Delete per nom. Comment This looks likely to be notable to me based on the content of the article (10 conferences over 10 years) and the fact that I had heard of it before (not that me hearing about it makes it notable, just that I know it does exist and I think they're pretty large). However, I don't see any good sources in this article to assert the notability. I'll change to "Keep" if someone cleans up this article to add some.
