'Beijing Express') is the Italian TV version of the Dutch-Belgian reality show Peking Express created by Ludo Poppe

On the various paths there are small "quests" which the couples must complete in order to advance in the game. Halfway along the route, there is a destination where the couples will find the Red Book of Pechino Express, which they must sign to certify their arrival. Here, the most important challenge of each leg... The first winner of the Strega, elected by the Sunday Friends, was Ennio Flaiano, for his first and only novel Tempo... The show features a race between couples made of famous and unknown people, who compete along a route of 10 legs through various countries to reach a specific destination over a multi-day journey. Each competitor is provided with a minimum amount of supplies, contained in a backpack, and one euro per day in local currency with which to cover their basic needs. Couples cannot use the money to pay for transportation or a stay, although they can ask local residents to pay for them. In order to get around, couples have to hitchhike, whilst to find a place to stay for the night, they have to rely on local hospitality. In 1944 Maria and Goffredo Bellonci started to host a literary salon at their home in Rome. These Sunday gatherings of writers, artists and intellectuals grew to include many of the most notable figures of Italian cultural life. The group became known as the Amici della Domenica, or Sunday Friends. In 1947 the Belloncis, together with Guido Alberti, owner of the firm which produces the Strega liqueur, decided to inaugurate a prize for fiction, the winner being chosen by the Sunday friends. == History == Format == The activities of the Bellonci circle and the institution of the prize were seen as marking a tentative return to 'normality' in Italian cultural life: a feature of the reconstruction which followed the years of Fascism, war, occupation and liberation.
