Essentials of LifeSpan Development (3rd edition).
London: W. Biological changes influence psychological and interpersonal/social developmental changes, which are often described by stage theories of human development. Erik Erikson and Carl Jung proposed stage theories of human development that encompass the entire life span, and emphasized the potential for positive change very late in life. New York: McGraw Hill[page needed] Gold Adult development encompasses the changes that occur in biological and psychological domains of human life from the end of adolescence until the end of one's life. W. Stage theories typically focus on "age-appropriate" developmental tasks to be achieved at each stage. (2014) 33add55fbb

(from Latin adolescere 'to mature') is a transitional stage of human physical and psychological development that generally occurs during the period from puberty to adulthood (typically corresponding to the age of majority). Adolescence is usually associated with the teenage years, but its physical, psychological or cultural expressions may begin earlier or end later.). OCLC 1089435881. McGraw-Hill. Puberty typically begins during preadolescence, particularly in females. Age provides only a rough marker of adolescence, and scholars have not agreed upon a precise definition. Physical growth (particularly in males) and cognitive development can extend past the teens. Adolescence (15th ed. The World Health Organization definition officially designates adolescence as the phase 33add55fbb
