

The Endless Steppe

The Endless Steppe is about Esther Hautzig's childhood. When Esther is 10 years old, she and her family, along with other Jews, are taken from their home in Vilnius (that time known as Wilno), Poland by the Russians. She and her family are sent on a long train ride to Siberia, are separated from one another, and are forced to work in horrible conditions in a gypsum mine. After some time her family is allowed to live in a hut in the nearby town of Rubtsovsk, but they do not have much money and need to find creative ways to make a small income. They also have trouble with the Russian language and the fact that Esther's father is conscripted to the front lines of the Russian army. After several years and the war's conclusion, Esther's father returns, and the exiled Jews are returned to Poland. Esther and her family come home to Vilnius, where they find that none of the people they knew before remain; all died in the Holocaust. They encounter unwelcome...

Her childhood was gravely interrupted by the beginning of World War II and the conquest in 1941 of eastern Poland by Soviet troops. Her family was uprooted and deported to Rubtsovsk, Siberia, where Esther spent the next five years in harsh exile. Her award-winning novel The Endless Steppe is an autobiographical account of those years in Siberia. After the war, when she was 15, she and her family moved back to Poland, although in her heart, Esther wanted to stay. Hautzig reportedly wrote The Endless Steppe at the prompting of Presidential candidate Adlai Stevenson, to whom she had written after reading his articles about his visit to Rubtsovsk. 9771f8d81d which "marks books of exceptional merit". 9771f8d81d
