ChIP-on-chip The most prominent representatives of this class are transcription factors, replication-related proteins, like origin recognition complex protein (ORC), histones, their variants, and histone modifications. ChIP-on-chip (also known as ChIP-chip) is a technology that combines chromatin immunoprecipitation ('ChIP') with DNA microarray ("chip"). Specifically, it allows the identification of the cistrome, the sum of binding sites, for DNA-binding proteins on a genome-wide basis. Like regular ChIP-on-chip

(also known as ChIP-chip) is a technology that combines chromatin immunoprecipitation ('ChIP') with DNA microarray ('chip'). As the name of the technique suggests, such proteins are generally those operating in the context of chromatin. Like regular ChIP, ChIP-on-chip is used to investigate interactions between proteins and DNA in vivo. Whole-genome analysis can be performed to determine the locations of binding sites for almost any protein of interest df666dc327
