Priming (psychology)
Generally speaking, the generation of priming effect depends on the existence of some positive or negative relationship between priming and target stimuli. Priming effects involve word recognition. For example, the word nurse might be recognized more quickly following the word doctor than following the word bread. Priming can be perceptual, associative, repetitive, positive, negative, affective, semantic, or conceptual. The priming effect is the positive or negative effect of a rapidly presented stimulus (priming stimulus) on the processing of a second stimulus (target stimulus) that appears shortly after. consumers perceiving lemonade suddenly as sweeter when the logo of the drink is more saturated towards Priming is a concept in psychology and psycholinguistics to describe how exposure to one stimulus may influence a response to a subsequent stimulus, without conscious guidance or intention. and sensation transference.
