Dynamic Data Driven Applications Systems Around 2008, Darema introduced the term Infosymbiotics or Infosymbiotic Dynamic Data Driven Applications Systems (DDDAS) is a paradigm whereby the computation and instrumentation aspects of an application system are dynamically integrated with a feedback control loop, in the sense that instrumentation data can be dynamically incorporated into the executing model of the application (in targeted parts of the phase-space of the problem to either replace parts of the computation to speed-up the modeling or to make the model more accurate for aspects of the system not well represented by the model; this can be considered as the model "learning" from such dynamic data inputs), and in reverse the executing model can control the system's instrumentation to cognizantly and adaptively acquire additional data (or search through archival data), which in-turn can improve or. designated as academic co-chairs of the workshop Profs Craig Douglas and Abhi Deshmukh 6831b67eae
