Systematic review Cochrane Reviews are published in The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews section of the Cochrane Library. The 2015 impact factor for The Cochrane A systematic review is a scholarly synthesis of the evidence on a clearly presented topic using critical methods to identify, define and assess research on the topic. For example, a systematic review of randomized controlled trials is a way of summarizing and implementing evidence-based medicine. Systematic reviews, sometimes along with meta-analyses, are generally considered the highest level of evidence in medical research. A systematic review extracts and interprets data from published studies on the topic (in the scientific literature), then analyzes, describes, critically appraises and summarizes interpretations into a refined evidence-based conclusion 1119c58bc3

Review article A review article is generally considered a secondary source since it may analyze and discuss the method and conclusions in previously published studies. It resembles a survey article or, in news publishing, overview article, which also surveys and summarizes previously published primary and secondary sources, instead of reporting new facts and results. A review of such sources is often referred to as a tertiary review. The discussion section of the A review article is an article that summarizes the current state of understanding on a topic within a certain discipline. this section, context and the relevance of the review is included. The jargon used will depend on the intended audience. Survey articles are however considered tertiary sources, since they do not provide additional analysis and synthesis of new conclusions 1119c58bc3
