War of the currents The war of the currents was a series of events surrounding the introduction of competing electric power transmission systems in the late 1880s and early The war of the currents was a series of events surrounding the introduction of competing electric power transmission systems in the late 1880s and early 1890s. Using high voltage allowed an AC system to transmit power over longer distances from more efficient large central generating. In 1886, the Edison system was faced with new competition: an alternating current system initially introduced by George Westinghouse's company that used transformers to step down from a high voltage so AC could be used for indoor lighting. It grew out of two lighting systems developed in the late 1870s and early 1880s: arc lamp street lighting running on high-voltage alternating current (AC), and large-scale low-voltage direct current (DC) indoor incandescent lighting being marketed by Thomas Edison's company
