Symphony No. 2 (Walton) Walton, although a diligent worker, did not habitually compose quickly. It was commissioned in November 1955 by the Liverpool Philharmonic Society and was originally intended to commemorate in 1957 the 750th anniversary of the city of Liverpool's royal charter of 1207. In addition, existing commissions and other challenges further delayed the completion of the symphony. 2 between 1957 and 1960. He finished the first movement in 1959, then the last two in 1960; that same year, he revised the first into its final form. By the time the symphony was completed, the occasion for which it was composed had passed. The city of Liverpool agreed to cede the location of the world premiere to the Edinburgh Festival, with the proviso that it be played by the Royal. A solo horn announces the coda; the opening motif is repeated and the movement concludes softly in G minor. appearance.
