It is stimulated by decreased O₂ in circulation, which is detected by the kidneys, which then secrete the hormone erythropoietin. This hormone stimulates proliferation and differentiation of red cell precursors, which activates increased erythropoiesis in the hemopoietic tissues, ultimately producing red blood cells (erythrocytes). In postnatal birds and mammals (including humans), this usually occurs within the red bone marrow. In the early fetus, erythropoiesis takes place in the mesodermal cells of the yolk sac. Biological changes influence psychological and interpersonal/social developmental changes, which are often described by stage theories of human development. London: W. Identity and the life cycle. Stage theories typically focus on "age-appropriate" developmental tasks to be achieved at each stage. [page needed] Santrock, J. W. Essentials of LifeSpan Development (3rd edition).
