That said, advances in viral and non-viral vector engineering may enable machine free processes, where transduction takes place in a bag This would enable efficient scaling of cell therapy even more since it doesn't require an instrument 5cde48627e hurdles must be overcome. • Processes that manipulate cells must become standardized and reproducible → most cell therapy lab use technicians with hand-based protocols, creating variability GMP conditions are expensive and capacity is very limited → specific airflow requirements, expensive to build, gowning requirements 5cde48627e Introduction 5cde48627e Role of Transfusion Medicine physicians in Cell Therapy Transfusion Medicine can: • Assess patient status for cell collection and set goals for apheresis. Oversee cell product release, approving dose and adjusting manufacturing time in the lab. • Participate in the approval of all indications for cell therapy procedures in the hospital. 5cde48627e How important is

Services Why is cellular therapy important Orthobiologics vs cellular therapies Orthobiologics Autologous cell therapy Pathologists are well positioned to oversee diagnostic workup of various biomarkers, working with the hematology, immunology, and chemistry labs, integrating informatics approaches as necessary for cell product analysis. In transfusion medicine, the more practitioners can funnel the heterogeneity of patients into a standard predictable clinical response, the better we can serve our bridging roles of physicians and manufacturers. What is the solution for these challenges? • AUTOMATION • Automation would allow standardized, reproducible methods for generating every cell product A device that is based on a closed-system would not require GMP facilities, could be integrated into existing facilities or hospital blood banks. Reducing Vein-to-Vein Time The key to reducing vein-to-vein could be addressed by several strategies: • Reducing the cell dose required, possibly through trials to show a lower dose achieves equivalent results. • Engineering the cells to be more potent at lower doses Collecting cell types that are naturally more potent for similar efficacy at lower doses Moving manufacturing on-site or locally to avoid shipping times Intro Billing for Telehealth Services - Originating Site Academic institutions One direction \\"Telehealth\\" Services Before and After the PHE Questions Overview: Terminology Matters Practical Logistics of the Prodigy CAR-T companies will still be crucial in providing the viral vector or plasmid DNA, as well as protocols to run on any machines. .
