== Freud's religious background == 2fe4cff27e In An Autobiographical Study, originally published in 1925, Freud recounts that "My parents were Jews, and I have remained a Jew myself." Familiarity with Bible stories, from an age even before he learned to read, had "an enduring effect on the direction of my interest." In 1873, upon attending the University at Vienna, he first encountered antisemitism: "I found that I was expected to feel myself inferior and an alien because I was a Jew." Before his wedding, Freud desired to convert to Protestantism to avoid a Jewish ceremony but was ultimately persuaded not to. 2fe4cff27e

Sigmund Freud's views on religion Freud considered God a fantasy, based on the infantile need for a dominant father figure. observations, and none that is derived from revelation, intuition or divination. On relations between science and philosophy and science and religion Freud Sigmund Freud's views on religion are described in several of his books and essays. He claimed that during the development of early civilization, God and religion were necessities to help restrain our violent impulses, but in modern times can be discarded in favor of science and reason 2fe4cff27e

The term "radical media" was introduced by John D. H. Downing in his 1984 study of rebellious communication and social movements emphasizing alternative media's political and goal-oriented activism. Radical media manifests new social movements' individualistic, and humanistic socio-political model of disintermediation. While the coverage of this term coincides with other branches of alternative media, namely tactical and activist media, it differs from conventional mass media in terms of... 2fe4cff27e

Radical media However, there are some critics that exist in terms of validating the authenticity of the content, its political ideology, long-term perishability, and the social actions led by the media. Advocates support its alternative and oppositional view of mass media, arguing that conventional outlets are politically biased through their production and distribution. While the early social movements focused on anti-war politics, the Radical media are communication outlets that disperse action-oriented political agendas utilizing existing communication infrastructures and their supportive users. movement, Dadaism, which rejects logical reasoning, forces irrationality and intuition. These types of media are differentiated from conventional mass communications through its progressive content, reformist culture, and democratic process of production and distribution 2fe4cff27e
