Pseudo-range multilateration g. , Shot-Spotter Pseudo-range multilateration, often simply multilateration (MLAT) when in context, is a technique for determining the position of an unknown point, such as a vehicle, based on measurement of biased times of flight (TOFs) of energy waves traveling between the vehicle and multiple stations at known locations. Pseudo-range multilateration surveillance systems often use existing pulsed transmitters (if suitable) — e. , GPS). g. continuous wide-band (e 5cb4cddb6d

Lists Filters modify the images recorded. Sometimes they are used to make only subtle changes to images; other times the image would simply not be possible without them. In monochrome photography, coloured filters affect the relative brightness of different colours; red lipstick may be rendered as anything from almost white to almost black with different filters. Others change the colour balance of images, so that photographs under... Religion Geography and places Outlines Proposals (persistent) Nature

Health and fitness TOFs are biased by synchronization errors in the difference between times of arrival (TOA) and times of transmission (TOT): $\text{TOF} = \text{TOA} - \text{TOT}$. Pseudo-ranges (PRs) are TOFs multiplied by the wave propagation speed: $\text{PR} = \text{TOF} \cdot s$. In general, the stations' clocks are assumed synchronized but the vehicle's clock is desynchronized.

People counter Minneapolis A people counter is an electronic device that is used to measure the number of people traversing a certain passage or entrance. They are commonly used by retail establishments to judge the effectiveness of marketing campaigns, building design and layout, and the popularity of particular brands. Examples include simple manual clickers, smart-flooring technologies, infrared beams, thermal imaging systems, Wi-Fi trackers and
