The rufous fishing owl was formally described in 1871 by the English ornithologist Richard Bowdler Sharpe based on a specimen collected in the Fante region of southern Ghana and sent to London by the British colonial administrator Herbert Taylor Ussher. Sharpe coined the current binomial name Scotopelia ussheri where the specific epithet honours Ussher. The species is monotypic: no subspecies are recognised. The genus Scotopelia now includes two other more widely distributed African owls: the vermiculated fishing owl and Pel's fishing owl.

All my CDs released here so far have been instrumental records. Although I really enjoy making instrumental records, there is an expression that can be realized only in a vocal record. A need to tell a story and the emotion the human voice imparts to that story. There is a craft and challenge to songwriting I have always enjoyed, and somewhere a decade ago I got sidetracked and left that part of my writing aside. The album features the collaborations of bassist Paul III, guitarist Lindy Dickerson, and drummer DJ Bonebrake. All of them collaborated on Dickerson's previous album Iconography. As opposed to his previous release, Dickerson now serves also as vocalist. Talking about this new role Dickerson explains:
