Therapeutic privilege This is mainly due to the complex ethical and legal ramifications in withholding information from a patient and how to define someone as being at sufficient risk to fall into this category wherein therapeutic privilege should prevail. Another challenge in enacting therapeutic privilege is the consideration of other professionals involved. As of 2022, this defence is permissible in countries such as Australia, Canada, England, Netherlands and Wales as an exception to the standard consent process. patient making choices completely independent of the doctor’s input does not reflect the complex reality of medical decision making’. Despite this, there are very limited cases in which therapeutic privilege has been upheld. Therapeutic privilege Therapeutic privilege refers to the decision of a healthcare practitioner to withhold information from a patient when there is a justified belief that disclosure may cause serious mental or physical harm to them b78fdcc080
