United States Navy torpedo retrievers Their maximum speed in 20 knots, while cruising speed United States Navy submarines, surface ships, and aircraft launch torpedoes, missiles, and autonomous undersea vehicles as part of training exercises. are constructed of welded aluminum plates. Typically, these training munitions have no warhead and are recovered from the sea and reused. At various points in history, newly manufactured torpedoes were fired as a quality control measure and these, too, had to be recovered before issuing them to the fleet. These experimental units also need to be recovered, in their case to obtain evaluation data. They are powered by twin Caterpillar C32 Diesel engines. The U. As their missions evolved over the last century they have been variously known as torpedo. S. Similarly, new naval weapons under development are launched at sea in performance trials. Navy has used a variety of boats to accomplish the retrieval of these test and training munitions 9a8748ba92
