The earliest forms of stoping were conducted with hand tools or by fire-setting; later gunpowder was introduced. From the 19th century onward, various other explosives, power-tools, and machines came into use. As mining progresses the stope is often backfilled with tailings, or when needed for strength, a mixture of tailings and cement. In old mines, stopes frequently collapse at a later time, leaving craters or flashes at the surface. They are an unexpected danger when records of underground mining have been lost with the passage of time. 13120f1f0b

Stoping (load, haul, dump machine). Stoping is used when the country rock is sufficiently strong not to collapse into the stope, although in most cases artificial support is also provided. The biggest limitation with this method is the length of holes that can be accurately drilled by the production drill, larger diameter Stoping is the process of extracting the desired ore or other mineral from an underground mine, leaving behind an open space known as a stope 13120f1f0b

Digging Digging is actually the combination of two processes, the first being the breaking or cutting of the surface, and the second being the removal and relocation of the material found there. In a simple digging situation, this may be accomplished in a single motion, with the digging implement being used to break the surface and immediately fling the material away from the hole or other structure being dug. Dump digging Cave digging Clam digging Double digging, gardening technique Gum digging Privy digging Well digging Carl Dreher, "The Right Way to Dig" Digging, also referred to as excavation, is the process of using some implement such as claws, hands, manual tools or heavy equipment, to remove material from a solid surface, usually soil, sand or rock on the surface of Earth 13120f1f0b

Many kinds of animals engage in digging, either as part of burrowing behavior or to search for food or water under the surface of the ground. Historically, humans have engaged in digging for both of these reasons, and for a variety of additional reasons, such as engaging in agriculture and gardening, searching for minerals, metals, and other raw materials such as during mining and quarrying, preparing for construction, making fortifications and irrigation, and also excavations in archaeology, searching for fossils and rocks in palaeontology and geology and burial... 13120f1f0b Tana Hoban was born in Philadelphia to Jeanette (Dimmerman) Hoban and Abraham T.
