Wireless telegraphy In radiotelegraphy, information is transmitted by pulses of radio waves of two different lengths called "dots" and "dashes", which spell out text messages, usually in Morse code. and "dashes", which spell out text messages, usually in Morse code. Before about 1910, the term wireless telegraphy was also used for other experimental technologies for transmitting telegraph signals without wires. At the receiver the pulses are audible in the receiver's speaker as beeps, which are translated back to text by an operator who knows Morse code. In a manual system, the sending operator taps on a switch called a telegraph key which turns the transmitter on and off, producing the pulses of radio waves
