Psychedelic experience commonly LSD, mescaline, psilocybin mushrooms, or DMT). The outcome of a psychedelic experience is heavily influenced by the person's mood. Psychedelic experiences lack predictability, as they can range from being highly pleasurable (known as a good trip) to frightening (known as a bad trip). Psychedelic experiences feature alterations in normal perception such as visual distortions and a subjective loss of self-identity, sometimes interpreted as mystical experiences. For example, an acid trip is a psychedelic experience brought on by the use of LSD, while psychedelics, entheogens, or historically as psychotomimetics, are a large and diverse class of psychoactive drugs that can produce altered states of consciousness characterized by major alterations in thought, mood, and perception as well as other changes. Hallucinogens are often categorized as either being psychedelics, dissociatives, or deliriants, but not all hallucinogens fall into these three classes 436c4f5ca2

Andrew Feldmár D. Laing, the Scottish psychiatrist who was one of the leading figures of the counterculture of the 1960s. Laing, who later became his friend, was his teacher and therapist first. Feldmár rejects the labelling of human suffering, and therefore distances. Following his mentor, Feldmár practices and popularizes a form of radical psychotherapy, where the main goal of the therapist is to engage in a real, spontaneous and honest relationship with the patient. He is most known as the Hungarian follower of R. based on the findings of research on interpersonal phenomenology, spiritual emergency, the anthropology of healing, existential psychotherapy
