History of computing hardware (1960s-present) Metal-oxide-semiconductor (MOS) large-scale integration (LSI) technology subsequently led to the development of semiconductor memory in the mid-to-late 1960s and then the microprocessor in the early 1970s. These advances led to the miniaturized personal. This led to primary computer memory moving away from magnetic-core memory devices to solid-state static and dynamic semiconductor memory, which greatly reduced the cost, size, and power consumption of computers. Around 1953 to 1959, discrete transistors started being considered sufficiently reliable and economical that they made further vacuum tube computers uncompetitive. The history of computing hardware starting at 1960 is marked by the conversion from vacuum tube to solid-state devices such as transistors and then integrated circuit (IC) chips. series; the Honeywell 200, Honeywell 400, and Honeywell 800; the GE-400 series and the GE-600 series; the RCA 301, 3301, 501, and the Spectra 70 series 017a24cb7a

Maltese language Below are a few examples: "Fridge" is a common shortening of "refrigerator". It is also said to have descended from Siculo-Arabic, which developed as a Maghrebi Arabic dialect in the Emirate of Sicily between 831 and 1091. According to John L. It is the only Semitic language written in the Latin script. As a result of the Norman invasion of Malta and the subsequent re-Christianisation of the islands, Maltese evolved independently. It is spoken by the Maltese people and is a national language of Malta, and is the only official Semitic and Afroasiatic language of the European Union. Hayes, it descended from a North African dialect of Colloquial Arabic which was introduced to Malta when the Aghlabids captured it in 869/870 CE. "Refrigerator" is a Latinate word which could be imported into Maltese as rifrigeratur Maltese (Maltese: Malti, also L-Ilsien Malti or Lingwa Maltija) is a Semitic language derived from late medieval Sicilian Arabic with Romance superstrata 017a24cb7a
