

Mentoring Programs That Work

Pair programming The two programmers switch roles often. Pair programming is a software development method in which two computer programmers work together at one workstation. One, the driver, writes source code. Pair programming is a software development method in which two computer programmers work together at one workstation. One, the driver, writes source code while the other, the observer or navigator, reviews each line of code as it is typed in.

According to the Business Dictionary, a mentor is a senior or more experienced person who is assigned to function as an advisor, counsellor, or guide to a junior or trainee. The mentor is responsible for offering help and feedback to the person under their supervision. A mentor's role, according to this definition, is to use their experience to help a junior employee by supporting them in their work and career, providing comments on their work, and, most crucially, offering direction to mentees as they work through problems and circumstances at work.

While reviewing, the observer also considers the "strategic" direction of the work, coming up with ideas for improvements and likely future problems to address. This is intended to free the driver to focus all of their attention on the "tactical" aspects of completing the current task, using the observer as a safety net and guide.

Youth mentoring The goal of youth mentoring programs is to improve Youth mentoring is the process of matching mentors with young people who need or want a caring, responsible adult in their lives. This goal can be accomplished through school work, communication, and/or activities. The goal of youth mentoring programs is to improve the well-being of the child by providing a role model that can support the child academically, socially and/or personally. Adult mentors are usually unrelated to the child or teen and work as volunteers through a community-, school-, or church-based social service program. Goals and settings within a mentoring program vary by country because of cultural values. or teen and work as volunteers through a community-, school-, or church-based social service program.

Peer mentoring within peer mentoring programs need to be corrected before these programs can reach their full potential on college campuses. Peer mentors are also used for health and lifestyle changes. Peer mentors provide education, recreation and support opportunities to individuals. An example would be an experienced student being a peer mentor to a new student, the peer mentee, in a particular subject, or in a new school. For example, clients, or patients, with support from peers, may have one-on-one sessions that meet regularly to help them recover or rehabilitate. Most peer mentors are picked for their sensibility, confidence, social skills and reliability. Peer mentoring is a form of mentorship that usually takes place between a person who has lived through a specific experience (peer mentor) and a person who is new to that experience (the peer mentee). The peer mentor may challenge the mentee with new ideas, and encourage the mentee to move beyond the things that are most comfortable. Peer mentoring provides individuals who have had a specific life experience the chance to learn from those who have recovered, or rehabilitated, following such an experience

According to The Encyclopedia of Informal Education: == Structure ==
The original form of mentoring is the idea that an experienced worker trains an incoming new worker. The concept of mentoring dates back to Homer's Odyssey. Famous mentor-protégé pairs can be found in almost every profession. Recent data shows that mentoring cannot only be seen through the passing down of information from experienced workers to new workers, but also the development of lasting relationships that can affect how the work develops at his or her new job.

"The classic definition of mentoring is of an older experienced guide who is acceptable to the young person and who can help ease the transition to adulthood by a mix of support and challenge. In this sense it is a developmental relationship in which the young person is inducted into the world of adulthood." The organisation is run on a voluntary, not-for-profit basis, with a small support staff, and has its headquarters in the United Kingdom with a registered address in Brussels, Belgium. A student initiated the International Mentoring Program in 1999 to offer peer support to incoming international students at Brown University. The students in the program also helped create International Orientation, which was managed by the Office of Admissions and the Office of International Student and Scholar Services (OISSS) at the time. The program also received support from the Dean of college and Office of Student Life in its early years. The Dean of college provided funds while the Office of Student Life helped students in training and in developing the program. Pair programming increases the human-hours required to deliver code compared to programmers working individually. However, the resulting code has fewer defects. Along with code development time, other factors like field support costs and quality assurance also figure into the return on investment. Pair programming might theoretically offset these expenses by reducing defects in the programs. NCWIT was founded in 2004 by Lucinda (Lucy) Sanders, Dr. Telle Whitney, and Dr. Robert (Bobby) Schnabel.
