Nova The main sub-classes of novae are classical novae, recurrent novae (RNe), and dwarf novae. A nova is a transient astronomical event that causes the sudden appearance of a bright, apparently "new" star (hence the name "nova", Latin for "new") that slowly fades over weeks or months. They are all considered to be cataclysmic variable stars. All observed novae involve white dwarfs in close binary systems, but causes of the dramatic appearance of a nova vary, depending on the circumstances of the two progenitor stars

NOvA Neutrinos from NuMI pass through 810 km of Earth to reach the far detector. NOvA's main goal is to observe the oscillation of muon neutrinos to electron neutrinos. Intended to be the successor to MINOS, NOvA consists of two detectors, one at Fermilab (the near detector), and one in northern Minnesota (the far detector). The primary physics goals of NOvA are: Precise measurement, for neutrinos and antineutrinos, of the mixing The NOvA (NuMI Off-Axis νe Appearance) experiment is a particle physics experiment designed to detect neutrinos in Fermilab's NuMI (Neutrinos at the Main Injector) beam. oscillation of muon neutrinos to electron neutrinos. Bossa nova It is mainly characterized by a calm syncopated rhythm with chords and fingerstyle mimicking the beat of a samba groove, as if it was a simplification and stylization on the guitar of the rhythm produced by a samba school band. Another defining characteristic of the style is the use of unconventional chords in some cases with complex progressions and "ambiguous" harmonies. A common misconception is that these complex chords and harmonies were derived from jazz, but samba guitar players have been using similar arrangement structures since the early 1920s, indicating a case of parallel evolution of styles rather than a simple transference from.
