Imperative programming The next two decades saw the development of many other major high-level imperative programming languages. In the In computer science, imperative programming is a programming paradigm of software that uses statements that change a program's state. Imperative programming focuses on describing how a program operates step by step (with general order of the steps being determined in source code by the placement of statements one below the other), rather than on high-level descriptions of its expected results. features now common in imperative languages. In much the same way that the imperative mood in natural languages expresses commands, an imperative program consists of commands for the computer to perform 37224df7d2
