New Woman In 1894, writer Sarah Grand (1854–1943) used the term "new woman" in an influential article to refer to independent women seeking radical change. In the early 1890s, daughters of middle class Catholics expressed a desire to attend institution of higher education. The term was further popularized by British-American writer Henry James, who used it to describe the growth in the number of feminist, educated, independent career women in Europe and the United States. Catholic The New Woman was a feminist ideal that emerged in the late 19th century and had a profound influence well into the 20th century. Independence was not simply a matter of the mind; it also involved physical changes in activity and dress, as activities such as bicycling expanded women. The New Woman pushed the limits set by a male-dominated society. In response the English writer Ouida (Maria Louisa Ramé) used the term as the title of a follow-up article.
