Infant swimming Other mammals also demonstrate this phenomenon Infant swimming is the phenomenon of human babies and toddlers reflexively moving themselves through water and changing their rate of respiration and heart rate in response to being submerged. The slowing of heart rate and breathing is called the bradycardic response. Newborns are not old enough to hold their breath intentionally or strong enough to keep their head above water, and cannot swim unassisted. of a wider range of primitive reflexes found in infants and babies, but not children, adolescents and adults. It is not true that babies are born with the ability to swim, though they have primitive reflexes that make it look like they are 278dffc046
