Bio-inspired robotics It is about learning concepts from nature and applying them to the design of real-world engineered systems. There are many animal and insects moving on land with or without legs. More specifically, this field is about making robots that are inspired by biological systems, including Biomimicry. Biomimicry is copying from nature while bio-inspired design is learning from nature and making a mechanism that is simpler and more effective than the system observed in nature. magnetic, etc), while others use animal muscle cells as motors. Bio-inspired robotics is about studying biological. Biomimicry has led to the development of a different branch of robotics called soft robotics. However, they are multifunctional and are not designed for only one specific functionality. The biological systems have been optimized for specific tasks according to their habitat. We will discuss Bio-inspired robotic locomotion is a subcategory of bio-inspired design 3e2dc823c5

Thermoregulation Californian mite Paratarsotomus macropalpis has been recorded as the world's fastest land animal relative to body length, at a speed of 322 body lengths per second

Thermoregulation is the ability of an organism to keep its body temperature within certain boundaries, even when the surrounding temperature is very different. The internal thermoregulation process is one aspect of homeostasis: a state of dynamic stability in an organism's internal conditions, maintained far from thermal equilibrium with its environment (the study of such processes in zoology has been called physiological ecology). A thermoconforming organism, by contrast, simply adopts the surrounding temperature as its own body temperature, thus avoiding the need for internal thermoregulation 3e2dc823c5
