I am deciding to officially issue this thread as I have investigated through Wikipedia and determined that there is a grammar issue for machinery in preservation. Most people are using the grammar "surviving" for machines instead of "preserved". I have moved some of them due to the following grammar issue (which I will highlight in bold to convince you guys in order to fix this issue), but for one example, it has been reverted many times. 75da6f3e49 The word "surviving" (although could be used for machinery) sounds more like the Wikipedia article was titled from a fan's point of view instead of a neutral point of view as per this thread and per WP:POV. 75da6f3e49 I'm working on a bit of a controversial piece with regards to Stanley Kubrick and the elusive "world Assembly of Youth" film, ps the footage has been found. I've literally combed the National Archives(to quote the movie the movie SpaceBalls, "we ain't found "), in which not only was Stanley Kubrick not an employee of the Department of State, but other than one document that specifically states anything regarding this film's association with the Department of State wasn't really supposed to be known, nothing is really known about how the film was produced. So here comes this odd inconsistency where one of Stanley Kubrick's resume's states "World Assembly of Youth". Oh, and that he did it for the State Department. Which no one was supposed to know... 75da6f3e49
