Item response theory The topic of dimensionality In psychometrics, item response theory (IRT, also known as latent trait theory, strong true score theory, or modern mental test theory) is a paradigm for the design, analysis, and scoring of tests, questionnaires, and similar instruments measuring abilities, attitudes, or other variables. Several different statistical models are used to represent both item and test taker characteristics. It is a theory of testing based on the relationship between individuals' performances on a test item and the test takers' levels of performance on an overall measure of the ability that item was designed to measure. that response to an item is each and every test-taker's independent decision, that is, there is no cheating or pair or group work. This distinguishes IRT from, for instance, Likert. Unlike simpler alternatives for creating scales and evaluating questionnaire responses, it does not assume that each item is equally difficult
