The agricultural practices featured in Mission Garden include those of Hohokam, Tohono O'odham, Spanish colonials and other Europeans, Mexicans, Chinese, and people of African descent. As a result, Mission Garden grows crops that originated in many areas of the world. A few are listed in the Ark of Taste's catalog of heritage foods. White Sonora wheat and O'odham pink bean exemplify local foods in this catalog. Mission Garden's constantly changing garden areas show cultivars and farming methods that have succeeded in the Sonoran Desert. Throughout the year, Mission Garden also hosts regular and special events featuring these food plants. The gardens and events combine traditional and modern knowledge related to agriculture in a hot and arid region. This focus is relevant in the context of food insecurity and climate change.
