

Good Behavior

Social behavior This behavior can be affected by both the qualities of the individual and the environmental (situational) factors. Therefore, social behavior arises as a result of an interaction between the two—the organism and its environment. This means that, in regards to humans, social behavior can be determined by both the individual characteristics of the person, and the situation they are in. Social behavior can be seen as similar to an exchange of goods, with the expectation that when you give, you will receive something similar in return. Social behavior is behavior among two or more organisms within the same species, it encompasses any behavior in which one member affects another.
