Strike and dip They are used together to measure and document a structure's characteristics for study or for use on a geological map. A feature's orientation can also be represented by dip and dip direction, using the azimuth of the dip rather than the strike value. A feature's strike is the azimuth In geology, strike and dip is a measurement convention used to describe the plane orientation or attitude of a planar geologic feature. Linear features are similarly measured with trend and plunge, where "trend" is analogous to dip direction and "plunge" is the dip angle. A feature's strike is the azimuth (relative to north) of an imagined horizontal line across the plane, and its dip is the angle of inclination (or depression angle) measured downward from horizontal. strike and dip is a measurement convention used to describe the plane orientation or attitude of a planar geologic feature 2985d8a44a

Chips and dip gained significant popularity in the United States during the 1950s, in part due to a Lipton advertising campaign for their French onion dip recipe, sometimes referred to as "California dip".
