Alphabet Specifically, letters largely correspond to phonemes as the smallest sound segments that can distinguish one word from another in a given language. Not all writing systems represent language in this way: a syllabary assigns symbols to spoken syllables, while logographies assign symbols to words, morphemes, or other semantic units. Phoenician script was probably the first phonemic script, and it contained only about two dozen distinct letters, making it a script simple enough for traders An alphabet is a writing system that uses a standard
