Hunza (princely state) Hunza (Persian: هونزا, Urdu: ہونزا), also known as Kanjut (Persian: کانچوت; Urdu: کانچوت), was a Burusho princely state in the present-day Gilgit Baltistan Hunza (Persian: هونزا, Urdu: ہونزا), also known as Kanjut (Persian: کانچوت; Urdu: کانچوت), was a Burusho princely state in the present-day Gilgit Baltistan region of Pakistan. Initially, it functioned as a principality and subsequently became a princely state under a subsidiary alliance with the British India starting in 1892 and continuing until August 1947. The territory of Hunza now constitutes the northernmost part of Gilgit-Baltistan, Pakistan. For a brief period of three months, it remained unaligned after gaining independence, and then from November 1947 until 1974, it retained its status as a princely state within Pakistan. Although under the suzerainty of the Jammu and Kashmir (princely state), it was not a part of it and had status of a separate state c7448d2ae7
