This article was created in 2004, which means it's a leftover from our old notability standards for politicians under which being a party leader, even of a minor fringe party like Canadian Action, was considered an "inherent" notability freebie that conferred automatic inclusion rights and thereby exempted the person from having to be reliably sourced as long as her existence as a party leader was verifiable. But those aren't the standards that apply today: a party leader now has to have enough reliable source coverage about her to clear WP:GNG, which fringe party leaders often don't.
