A Hyperactive Workout for the Flying Squad Hyperactive Workout for the Flying Squad was released on 21 March 2005, through Sanctuary Records. It was originally due to be released in September 2004 but Sanctuary Records requested the band record a live album instead and it was eventually released on 21 March 2005. The album's unusual title was a phrase the band heard on BBC Radio 4 and decided they liked. The album was produced by Dave Eringa and recorded at a hunting lodge near Kirriemuir, Scotland. Critical reception to the album generally agreed that the album would please Ocean Colour Scene fans, although the album charted lower than previous albums at number 30 in the UK album chart compared to number 14 for the previous album North Atlantic Drift. "This Day Should Last Forever" was released as a single A Hyperactive Workout for the Flying Squad is the seventh studio album by English rock band Ocean Colour Scene 765c6a2c59

The Flying Dutchman (Dutch: De Vliegende Hollander) is a legendary ghost ship, allegedly never able to make port, but doomed to sail the sea forever. The oldest known extant version of the legend dates from the late 18th century. According to the legend, if hailed by another ship, the crew of the Flying Dutchman might try to send messages to land, or to people long dead. The myths and ghost stories are likely to have originated from the 17th-century Golden Age of the Dutch East India Company (VOC) and of Dutch maritime power. It was commonly believed that the Flying Dutchman was a 17th-century cargo vessel known as. In ocean lore, the sight of this phantom ship functions as a portent of doom. Reported sightings in the 19th and 20th centuries claimed that the ship glowed with a ghostly light
