Bottleneck (production) In production and project management, a bottleneck is a process in a chain of processes, such that its limited capacity reduces the capacity of the whole In production and project management, a bottleneck is a process in a chain of processes, such that its limited capacity reduces the capacity of the whole chain. The result of having a bottleneck are stalls in production, supply overstock, pressure from customers, and low employee morale. An example of a short-term bottleneck would be a skilled employee taking a few days off. There are both short and long-term bottlenecks. Long-term bottlenecks occur all the time and can cumulatively significantly slow down production. Short-term bottlenecks are temporary and are not normally a significant problem. An example of a long-term bottleneck is when a machine is not efficient enough and as a result has a long queue d0c448dc75
