After-school activity After-school activities, also known as after-school programs or after-school care, started in the early 1900s mainly just as supervision of students after the final school bell. After-school youth programs can occur inside a school building. There is a focus on helping students with school work but can be beneficial to students in other ways. Today, after-school programs do much more. Some programs are run by a primary or secondary school, while others are run by externally funded non-profit or commercial organizations. An after-school program, today, will not limit its focus on academics but with a holistic sense of helping the student population. An after-school activity is any organized program that youth or adult learner voluntarily can participate in outside of the traditional school day 4a3231aa32

The MSHSAA conducts championship-level activities in 23 activities. At least 50 member high schools must sponsor a sport for an official championship series to be conducted. Sports such as boys volleyball, field hockey, girls lacrosse, boys softball, and water polo are considered "emerging sports" by MSHSAA, but an official postseason series does not exist with less than 50 schools involved in those activities. MSHSAA also administers sideline cheerleading and dance team activities. 4a3231aa32

Motivational interviewing It is a directive, client-centered counseling style for eliciting behavior change by helping clients to explore and resolve ambivalence. It is used to elicit patient motivation to change a specific negative Motivational interviewing (MI) is a counseling approach developed in part by clinical psychologists William R. Miller and Stephen Rollnick. Compared with non-directive counseling, it is more focused and goal-directed, and departs from traditional Rogerian client-centered therapy through this use of direction, in which therapists attempt to influence clients to consider making changes, rather than engaging in non-directive therapeutic exploration. MI is most centrally defined not by technique but by its spirit as a facilitative. Motivational interviewing (MI) is a person-centered strategy, according to meta-analyses. The examination and resolution of ambivalence is a central purpose, and the counselor is intentionally directive in pursuing this goal. Miller and Stephen Rollnick 4a3231aa32
