Mereology As a branch of metaphysics, mereology examines the connections between parts and their wholes, exploring how components interact within a system. Some of the views Mereology (; from Greek μέρος 'part' (root: mere-) and the suffix -logy, 'study, discussion, science') is the philosophical study of part-whole relationships, also called parthood relationships. There are several views that attempt to answer this question. Is it possible for things, such as organisms to persist. Mereology was formally axiomatized in the 20th century by Polish logician Stanisław Leśniewski, who introduced it as part of a comprehensive framework for logic and mathematics, and coined the word "mereology". And if so, how. Evolution and the Catholic Church all things, who made them what they are. According to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, any believer may accept either literal or special creation within the period of an actual six-day, twenty-four-hour period, or they may accept the belief that the earth evolved over time under the guidance of God. Catholicism holds that God initiated and continued the process of his creation, that Adam and Eve were real people, and that all humans, whether specially created or evolved, have and have always had specially created souls for each individual. The question about the origins of the world and of man has been the object of many scientific studies which The Catholic Church holds no official position on the theory of creation or evolution, leaving the specifics of either theistic evolution or literal creationism to the individual within certain parameters established by the Church.
