Opposite it, there is a toll house built in around 1710. Today, the pub is in Barnet and the tollhouse is in Camden: both are now listed buildings, and traffic is reduced to one lane between the two. A suggestion in 1966 to demolish the tollhouse was successfully resisted, partly on the grounds that it would lead to more and faster traffic. The novel is set in Derbyshire in 1860. An Australian, Adam Salton, is invited to visit the estate of his elderly great-uncle and learns that he is the uncle's intended heir. He finds black snakes on his great uncle's property and learns about recent incidents of death or near-death by snakebite. He witnesses a local woman murdering a servant.
