Local government in India India is a federal republic with three spheres of government: union, state and local. Local self-government means that residents in towns, villages and rural settlements are the people who elect local councils and their heads authorising them to solve the important issues. Urban localities, covered in the 74th amendment to the Constitution, have Municipality but derive their powers from the individual state governments, while the powers of rural localities have been formalized. DEMOCRATIC DECENTRALISATION AND LOCAL SELF GOVERNMENTS IN INDIA by Indian Institute of Public Administration Milestones in the Evolution of Local Government Local government in India is governmental jurisdiction below the level of the state. Since 1992, local government in India takes place in two very distinct forms. The 73rd and 74th constitutional amendments give recognition and protection to local governments and in addition each state has its own local
