Joel Chandler Harris collected the story in its original dialect and included it in his 1881 book, "Uncle Remus, his Songs and his Sayings". His introduction mentions earlier publication of some of his Uncle Remus Stories in the columns of a daily newspaper, The Atlanta Constitution. Harris said these legends had "become a part of the domestic history of every Southern family." Indeed, Theodore Roosevelt (the 26th president of the United States, born in 1858), noted in his autobiography that as a young child he heard Br'er Rabbit tales from his Southern aunt, Anna Bulloch, and that his uncle, Robert Roosevelt, transcribed some of her stories from her dictation. fb4da812de

Baby farming was associated with the Victorian era and changes to family structures that occurred during the Industrial Revolution, where single mothers and working-class parents were unable to care for some or all of their children and could not rely on extended family for child care. The duration of baby farming arrangements varied, with short-term arrangements for infants encompassing wet nursing and longer or permanent arrangements being closer to adoption. At the decaying Merrye House, feared by locals, the Merrye children Ralph, Virginia, and Elizabeth have lived in seclusion with the family chauffeur Bruno ever since their parents died. All three have advanced Merrye Syndrome, a genetic affliction unique to members of the family which causes them, starting in late childhood, to regress down the evolutionary ladder mentally and physically. They exhibit a playful innocence well before their years, mixed with feral madness... == Publication history == Inside a vehicle == The term baby farming was typically used pejoratively. The practice was unregulated and widely associated with neglect, with the baby farmers incentivised to take on large numbers of children and spend as little as possible on the children in their care.
