Academic publishing academics self-archive a 'preprint' or 'postprint' copy of their paper for free download from their personal or institutional website. Peer review quality and selectivity standards vary greatly from journal to journal, publisher to publisher, and field to field. The part of academic written output that is not formally published but merely printed up or posted on the Internet is often called "grey literature". Most academic work is published in academic journal articles, books or theses. [citation needed] Some Academic publishing is the subfield of publishing which distributes academic research and scholarship.

Most scientific and scholarly journals, and many academic and scholarly books, though not all, are based on some form of peer review or editorial refereeing to qualify texts for publication
