@Maile66: This may be a case of Edge complying with the CSS standard better than your old browser, as for most people, "funky old typewriter" text (called monospaced text) is how most of us edit and most of us have edited since forever (and how WP:AIV's stuff is supposed to display). Alternatively, you recently changed from a Mac to a Windows computer. I don't have the exact... d56b66ca4d So, I'm pretty sure something isn't adjusted on my new computer. It's probably not browser-specific. Any ideas?

I just changed computers today. Mostly, everything looks like it should in Firefox, except in the edit screen, something is off on the font, and I don't know what I forgot to do. Under Options/Language and Appearance, I stuck to the Arial 16 I had on my other computer. The edit window text looks like it was done by one of those funky old typewriters. Also, if I open The Edge browser, without logging in. And, for instance look at WP:AIV ... just looking at the page without going into the edit screen. #4 where it says what the template should look like. The background is gray, and it has that same kind of lettering. d56b66ca4d
